I suggest that this song describes the feelings of a person in a dentists waiting room. The sounds of drills etc causes the person distress and to leave the dentists office. Outside is a much happier place.

But there's nothing in the song that suggests "society" other than the end bit, when he emerges (with relief) from the dentists office.

when i looked back

bc the road said something n th feathery parts off the tops of 400 purple bullthistles blew in a gust up th sky liek cotton gas in th itchy dense parts rite off the path th way it curved n a gust of wind shreddedem in2 theres air thistlespikes had a near rainbow color 2 them bc of howmany n howsharp n i heard what shesaid

i cant wait 2 see

what we will do all of us now that everythingz finally finally all closed allofit @ last

n that s when i looked back @ the sense of some1 standin bhind me hot wind hadhappened b4 in a place just liek this but not w the snowfall dust & maybenot w thesame classic rock quality 2 the air scraps of the 70sman n his shed hairs tatters xploding out of th ragweed barricades burning w contactdermatitis only1 way 2 overcomehim n she standin bhind us when sheopened her hands scanned th lil shaded margins n puddles eventho iknew allover it was dry

This Is Why Most Grocery Stores Don't Have Windows

Grocery stores have a few tricks up their sleeve.

excerpt: "the intimate society" / collective personality a sense of political community can be built [when] you look for details of behavior among the person espousing one view or another to decide which best corresponds with the sense of yourself... as ideology becomes measured as to whether it is believable or not through these details of behavior, political struggle itself becomes more personal. political language becomes miniaturized, little moments or events seeming of immense importance, because through these details you are learning who is fighting, and therefore, on which side you belong.

people seeking for others to disclose themselves in order to know where to belong, and the acts of disclosure consist of the details which symbolize who believes what, rather than what should be believed. baring of a self becomes the hidden agenda of political life. and when, in fantasy, these details revealing who is fighting are then blown to stand for a collective person, political community becomes moralistic rather than ideological in tone.

a society with a very low level of interaction between its members, dominated by ideas of individual, unstable personality, is likely to give birth through fantasy to enormously destructive collective personalities... this collective figure goes out of focus, in part because of its abstractness, in part because the very modes of perceiving personality destabilize the personality perceived. and finally, once formed, collective action for the community is difficult because people's constant worry is who belongs and who is to be excluded from this grandiose, unstable identity....

- richard sennet, "the fall of public man", pt. 4 'the intimate society', ch. 10, 1974
