dead man?

i saw electric whiteness flash across the man's face: i looked up @ the sky n i wondered what it was.

are my eyes bleeding internally again, or liek is it something worse, something unreal.

n when i went to look closer, i wondered closer too. is it liek is it he got a haircut? eyebrows got shaved? why would the face look pale if it had been in the sun? i noticed a few white hairs on the neck. i thought: is this man close to death?

the clouds up over it n the season of mayb-lightning mayb-hallucination made it unclear n allowed the thought 2 form in spite of horror tryin 2 bat it away:

i had seen the contorted ghost-face of a urgent demon, far fetched in a blue van about the corner n i had been afraid that he wd follow me--wd find me. i go through the city terrified of this all the time. whole thing is just big labyrinth of hot brick walls n enemies everywhere i run around the corner when it seems the malicious face might be in some new vehicle.

so i wondered if these kinds of thoughts wd turn the man pale.

- Other people may think you are a criminal. Well, they might think this way since tattoos are known to be symbols of criminal people. In other words, there are many criminals who get tattooed, especially on their faces. But as long as you have a good heart and you know that you are not a criminal, then there is no reason for you to be afraid.

without government and can provide for each other. The notion of social solidarity relies heavily on the idea of human altruism; that is, individuals will voluntarily offer goods, services, and resources without anything compelling it. Anarchists often shorten the term “social solidarity” simply into the term “solidarity,” and it is frequently woven into the speeches, statements, and writings of anarchists. In addition to the term “solidarity,” and other anarchist terms, anarchists often weave the term “mutual aid” and “collective” into their jargon and writings.

Violence is part of the anarchism in some anarchist beliefs. Viewing their own violent acts as political violence, violent anarchists attempt to frame the government as violent Collectivism is the idea that individual needs are subordinate to the good of the whole society. That is, decisions are made based upon what is best for the group and not necessarily what is best for individuals. In embracing collectivism, individuals are expected to sacrifice personal income, personal liberty, or personal property if it benefits society as a whole. The decision of whether an individual should sacrifice their own individual needs is not made by the individual. Rather, in a true collectivist society, the society as a whole decides whether the individual must forfeit their own needs or property if it is deemed to benefit the society. Nevertheless, in an ideal collectivist society, individuals already make the decision to donate to the collective without prompting from others.

Mutual Aid is a term popularized by anarchists to describe individuals who exchange goods and services to assist other individuals in society without government intervention.

Closely related to collectivism, mutual aid is not a new term, nor is it limited to anarchy.

However, the major factor in anarchist mutual aid is the absence of government and the absence
